SHORE LEAVE.

By ELLIS WAKEMAN.

When the Reliance dropped anchor off Block Island during the maneuvers around Newport and Point Judith, Tinkham appeared to have a settled melancholy descend on him.

Deborah. That was her name. Funny, sweet, little old-fashioned name, he thought, Deborah Allan. She had been born right there on the island, 15 miles out from the mainland, and to Tinkham she seemed as sweet and rare as one of her own island pond lilies the barefooted boys brought around the hotels and docks.

All he had done that first day was to look at her and say, "Hello, sweetheart!"

And she had cuffed him soundly, her big, dark eyes ablaze with swift anger, her little hand stinging in its rebuke.

"You boys from the ships think you own the island the minute you land here," she had told him. "And we're not that sort."

She wasn't "that sort," either. A bit of "Mandalay" had always made him think of her in the long cruises later on. "I've a neater, sweeter maiden in a cleaner, greener land."

She had boxed his ears, but she had also all unwittingly given him a new ideal of girlhood, and in his own way he had tried to fit his standards of life to the new picture.

Somewhere he had learned that she played the organ up at little St. Ann's-by-the-Sea, and he had slipped into one of the back pews to listen to her just for one Sunday, his "neater, sweeter maiden." Also, before the ships had slipped away toward Newport, he had found a chance of meeting her father. The old man had been busy calking the seams in his sailing boat and Tinkham had spent all his morning one day helping him and telling him stories of navy life. His reward had come when Deborah came down to call her father to dinner, and they had met properly and rightly, and he had held her hand in greeting.

His time was up in September. If he could only be sure she was still there in the little white house on the shore road. He stayed on board and hugged his memory of her, afraid to risk the truth. Then Grinnam came back and told him, big Grinnam of the gunners' mess.

"She's still here, Tink," excitedly. "Seen her today myself. She's all alone up there. Lost her father in the March blows."

"Dead?" asked Tinkham.

"Sure. She's all alone, I'm telling you. Thought you'd like to know."

"Thanks," answered Tinkham, and the next day he got shore leave. As he turned up the beaten track to the cottage, he lifted his cap and tucked it under his arm for all the world the way he had the day he went to hear her play in church. Then, finally, he stood at the green screen side door, tapping, he, Tinkham of the navy, with a year between him and a girl who had boxed his ears.

But he had full revenge. She came quickly from the inner room and saw him, and the color rose to her face as she gave a quick indrawn little gasp and laughed to cover it.

Tinkham had rehearsed all sorts of proper speeches all the way along the road, and now he stood silent, adoring her, and all he could think to say was: "My time's up in September. I'm on shore leave today."

She gave him a chair on the little porch looking seaward, and they sat down.

"Did you think I'd come?" he asked.

"Didn't you even remember me?"

She glanced from him to the boat lying keel up down on the sands.

"Yes, I remembered. Dad liked to talk to you best of the boys that came up here from the ships."

"You'll never like me, 'cause I spoke to you that day, will you?" he asked hungrily. "I didn't say anything only—"

"I remember what you said." She smiled at him from under her long lashes. "It's just what all of them say to any girl."

"If I said it today it wouldn't be the same," said Tinkham doggedly. "I'd-I'd mean it. That's what I came ashore for. I guess I've thought about you every day for a year, and when I heard about your trouble I had to come. I've only got one more month to serve then I'm going out home to see my mother and sisters. But I'm coming back. I can't get away from the sea. I like it right here. Maybe it's you that makes the island seem wonderful. I don't know, but I feel it right here."

Tinkham stopped and waited. He was not given to eloquence. Love seemed to leave him wordless and smitten with its glory. Deborah was looking past him out to sea, where the warships lay, gun metal gray in the morning light on the sapphire water.

"I'm coming back in September. If there isn't anybody else—" She shook her head quickly, and Tinkham's blue eyes sparkled. He leaned toward her eagerly, throwing his challenge to fate.

"Hello, sweetheart!" he whispered, not as he had said it that first day, but with all his heart's longing in his voice, all his life's hope in the call. Hello, sweetheart!

And Deborah, blushing softly, stretched out her hand to him.

"Hello, boy!" she answered. "I kind of thought you'd come ashore." (Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
